Ideas have consequences. What you believe about something or do not believe about something will have an effect in your life. In every area of our lives we are on a road, and that road is leading us in a direction that will eventually have a destination. If we do not like the destination we are heading towards, we need to get off the road we are currently traveling.

This seems like a simple premise, but in reality, this is the stumbling block to our progress, because we like the road we are on, or the road we are on is the only road we are familiar with, and even though we want to end up in “Los Angeles” in life, we are in actuality heading east, on a wide and broad road that actually ends in “New York.” The longer we are on the road, the more we set up our lifestyle to enjoy the ride, and the harder it gets to change direction. On this journey we have made many friends, we have become familiar with the sights, sounds, and eating establishments that we like, and we have convinced ourselves that since we are not hurting anyone, and since God made this world for us to enjoy, and since friends are important, we cannot turn around. We also think, in the back of our minds, that we have invested too much into this journey to have to turn around now.

The only troubling thought is the eventual destination. So, instead of dwelling on such negativity, we dwell on the road now, the people we are with now, and the idea that now, no matter what road we are on, we can live, love, and enjoy this life.
