Hangi, Haka and Hobbits: Notes from New Zealand (Planning to the 'Nth' Book 2) Coral Waight

Coral Waight began travelling alone at the age of 60. After several road trips around Tasmania, south of where she lives in Melbourne, Australia, she ventured overseas, to the south island of New Zealand. Just three hours across the Tasman Sea, known affectionately as 'the ditch', she discovered mountains, glaciers, lakes and fiords; the beautiful city of Christchurch, with its iconic cathedral; the first-ever rental car to break down, a phone that refused to work, and an impressive slide on a highly-polished floor (it's not the fall that hurts - it's the sudden stop at the end).

She returned three years later, this time to the north island, with its Maori history, its volcanic mountains and valleys, gigantic Kauri trees and its 'Lord of the Rings' trail; and to Christchurch, devastated by earthquakes, its cathedral now a pile of rubble. New Zealand began as a practice run for further afield but, as Coral discovered, why would you travel to Norway for fiords and glaciers, Hawaii for volcanoes, or Hollywood for movie sets, when you can get them all just three hours across 'the ditch'.

'Hangi, Haka and Hobbits' is the second book in Coral's travel series, 'Planning to the 'Nth'.

The first is 'The Edge of the World', documenting her four road trips around the island of Tasmania.
