"Bullying gay teenagers to death is a traditional family value." - Dan Savage (co-founder of the It Gets Better Project to prevent suicide among LGBT youth)

Gay teens attempt suicide four times as often as their heterosexual peers, according to The Trevor Project, an organization that runs a 24-hour helpline and an online community for lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender (LGBT) kids. When a child gets rejected by his family, the odds are even nine times higher.

Fear keeps many teens from coming out as gay. It takes time for them to come to terms with who they are. They might also feel everyone expects them to be straight and they might fear your reaction. Finding out your child is gay can be a tremendous shock. Parents have all kinds of emotional responses to this news and even more questions.

How did it all happen? Why am I so uncomfortable with his sexuality? Is my son just confused? Where have we failed as parents? How are we going to break the news to the rest of the family and our friends? What will the neighbors say when they see him with his boyfriend? Can we "straighten" him out? How can we be there for him?
